Patagonian-Hedge-Hog Soap-Holder

Swashbuckling days and old world charm come swirling back in the form of this beautiful Patagonian-Hedge-Hog Soap-Holder. It is believed that this item was first employed by Ferdinand Magellan in 1520. As the armada landed at Tierra del Fuego in Southern Argentina, Magellan complained that his soap kept sliding under his trunk during rough seas. To solve the problem, Magellan's First Officer nailed a Hedge-Hog to the counter above Magellan's wash basin and stuck the soap upon it. In our version neoprene suction cups attached to the hedge-hog's feet keep it from sliding or shifting in the bath.
